As Legal Executive Assistant at For Purpose Law Group, Savannah Winters brings more than a decade of executive and legal support experience to her work keeping FPLG's attorneys organized, on schedule, and moving forward. She partners closely with the firm's legal team, managing the behind-the-scenes details that let attorneys stay focused on serving nonprofit and social enterprise clients.

Savannah's career is rooted in high-stakes legal and executive support. She spent years as an Executive Legal Assistant supporting managing partners and attorneys across insurance defense, corporate defense, and oil and gas litigation practices, managing attorney calendars, court deadlines, depositions, and trial settings, and preparing, filing, and tracking pleadings, motions, and discovery in state and federal courts, all while serving as a Texas Notary Public. Most recently, she served as a Senior Executive Assistant and Office Manager supporting a Chief Projects Officer, where she ran global travel logistics, coordinated leadership workshops, and built the process frameworks that kept a global Project Management Office running smoothly. She holds a B.A. in Corporate Communication and Psychology from the University of Houston.

That blend of legal fluency and executive-level polish makes Savannah a natural fit for FPLG's fast-paced, attorney-facing work. She's known for her discretion, her calm under pressure, and her knack for anticipating what an attorney needs before they ask; qualities that keep FPLG's legal team running like clockwork.

Outside the office, Savannah draws on a background as varied as her résumé: she was once a Houston Texans cheerleader and a Houston Rockets Power Dancer, and she got her start giving back as a volunteer with the Boys & Girls Club of Greater Houston.
